Barney McKenna, last of original Dubliners, dies

DUBLIN | “Banjo” Barney McKenna, the last original member of the Irish folk band The Dubliners, died Thursday while having a morning cup of tea with a friend. He was 72 and had just marked his 50th year with the troupe.

Irish classical guitarist Michael Howard, who was with McKenna when he died, said he was talking with his longtime friend at his kitchen table, when “all of a sudden Barney’s head dropped down to his chest. It looked as if he’d nodded off.” Howard said paramedics over the phone talked him through emergency revival procedures, but McKenna “was pretty much gone.”

“The comfort that I take from it is, he passed away very peacefully sitting at his own breakfast table having a quiet cup of tea and a chat,” Howard said.

“What a lovely way to go,” said McKenna’s Dubliners bandmate for a quarter-century, guitarist and singer Eamonn Campbell.

McKenna was considered the most influential banjo player in Irish folk music.

He spent a half-century performing, recording and touring with the band ever since its 1962 creation in the Dublin pub O’Donoghue’s. The other three founders — Ronnie Drew, Ciaran Bourke and Luke Kelly — died in 2008, 1988 and 1984, respectively.

McKenna completed a

United Kingdom tour with The Dubliners last month and performed Wednesday night at a Dublin funeral. Howard, who also performed there and drove McKenna home afterward, said his friend performed “absolutely beautifully. When he finished there was a spontaneous, thunderous round of applause in the church.”

Born in Dublin in 1939, McKenna tried to join the Irish army band but was rejected because of bad eyesight.

He busked in the streets and pubs of the capital and developed a reputation as an innovative performer on a specially tuned, four-stringed tenor banjo, then a virtually unknown instrument in Ireland that he made an Irish folk favorite.

The gravel-voiced Drew recruited him to Friday night “sessions” — impromptu barside concerts — at O’Donoghue’s, a diminutive pub near the Irish parliament so famously packed that its barmen had to stand on stepstools to take orders.

It soon gained a reputation as the country’s top venue for live folk music, with The Dubliners performing alongside such other rising folk stars as The Chieftains and the Fureys.

Many noted how McKenna always made time to help younger musicians learn the art of the tenor banjo, particularly the intricacies of his own strumming and tuning techniques.

generosity to other instrumentalists was immense,” said Irish President Michael D. Higgins, who saw McKenna perform last month in a Dublin cathedral at one of The Dubliners’ many 50th anniversary performances.

Friends and bandmates told anecdote upon anecdote Thursday of the many off-the-wall, comically illogical comments made by McKenna over the years.

“He was like a brother to me,” recalled fiddler

John Sheahan, who joined The Dubliners in 1964 and remains in the band today. His favorite Barneyism: calling an optical illusion an “obstacle confusion.”

“He was very droll man and great company. You’d never know what he’d come out with next,” Campbell said. “My favorite song that he sang was ‘I’m a Man You Don’t Meet Every Day.’ And that was true about Barney.”

His Dutch wife, Joka, died 28 years ago and the couple had no children. He lived alone in the upscale fishing port of Howth and spent spare time tinkering with his boat and fishing on the Irish Sea. He continued to perform, despite suffering from diabetes and a mild stroke.

McKenna is survived by his partner Tina, sister Marie and brother Sean, who is also a top Irish banjo player.

Funeral arrangements were not immediately announced.

Curves donates to Shepherd House pantry

Curves, the world’s largest fitness franchisor, recently announced that the 2012 14th Annual Food Drive brought in 457 pounds in Maysville which will benefit Maysville’s Shepherd’s House, located on Forest Avenue. World-wide, Curves members have donated more than 61 million pounds of food since 2004. Carleen Lutz, Maysville Curves franchise owner says, “Our members have generous hearts. So, it’s no surprise to me that they rallied behind the food drive.” She explains, “We set a goal of collecting more than our 2011 recorded pounds of food and we, not only met that goal, but we doubled last year’s record!!!! I am really proud of our ladies.” But the food donations weren’t just from the Maysville Curves members. Non-members also brought in bags of groceries in exchange for an opportunity to join Curves with a waived service fee.

“Curves and our members are delighted to help our community,” said Lori Gallagher, Curves manager. “The Food Drive is an excellent program that fits perfectly with the Curves philosophy: promoting the health of the whole woman. The opportunity for our members to give back to the Maysville community promotes the spirit of giving.” For more information about Curves of Maysville, located at 1142 US 68, contact Carleen Lutz or Lori Gallagher at 606-564-3322 or curves.maysville@yahoo.com. For more information, please visit: www.curves.com.

FIRST QUARTER EARNINGS REPORT COULD DERAIL MARKET’S CLIMB

For the stock market, it was a triumphant first quarter. But for earnings growth, the past three months were just hum. Analysts are expecting earnings for companies in the Standard & Poor’s 500 index to decline 0.1 percent compared to a year ago, according to FactSet. It’s a tiny number but a significant turning point. Earnings growth was on a winning streak for the previous nine quarters. Year-over-year earnings growth has been at least 10 percent for all but the most recent period, when it was 6 percent. The reasons for the expected slowdown range from global (a weak Europe hurts everybody) to mathematical (it’s hard to top double-digit quarters). Whatever the cause, the stagnation in earnings growth is a stark reminder that the economy’s problems are far from solved. Just three months ago, analysts were predicting 3 percent earnings growth for the first quarter. We’ll soon see if the expectations are on target. Earnings season gets underway Tuesday when the aluminum producer Alcoa becomes the first major U.S. company to release its first-quarter results. Should this batch of earnings contain a lot of bad surprises, it could upend a stock market rally that pushed the S&P 500 index up 12 percent in the first three months of the year. Are earnings really that bad? It depends on how you look at it. People are blaming the slowdown on several factors including higher oil prices and Europe’s debt crisis. Those are legitimate concerns. High prices for oil and gas make it more expensive for companies to ship their products and leave people with less money to spend on other things. Europe’s debt crisis means that the U.S. can’t sell as many products there. It also hurts fast-growing economies like China and India that export to Europe. That, in turn, affects U.S. companies that count on growth in emerging markets to boost their own sales. — AP

PAUL WISEMAN
AP Economics Writer

WASHINGTON | The U.S. job market took a breather in March after its best hiring stretch since the Great Recession. Employers added 120,000 jobs last month — half the December-February pace and well short of the 210,000 economists were expecting. The unemployment rate fell from 8.3 percent in February to 8.2 percent, the lowest since January 2009, but that was largely because many Americans stopped looking for work. Still, few economists expect hiring to fizzle in spring and summer, as it did the past two years. And they blamed seasonal factors for much of Friday’s disappointing report from the Labor Department. “We don’t think this is the start of another spring dip in labor market conditions,” said Paul Ashworth, chief U.S. economist with Capital Economics. The report was also closely watched in political circles. If employers retreat on hiring, consumers could lose confidence in the economy and potentially dim President Barack Obama’s re-election hopes. Ashworth and other economists cited the weather for the latest jobs report. A warm January and February allowed construction companies and other businesses that work outdoors to hire workers a few weeks earlier than usual, effectively stealing jobs from March. It helps explain a 7,000 drop in construction jobs.

CHARLES REXARBOGAST, ASSOCIATED PRESS
In this April 4, 2012 photo, auto workers at the Ford Stamping Plant stack the inner door panel for the Ford Explorer, in Chicago Heights, Ill. The Labor Department says the economy added 120,000 jobs in March, down from more than 200,000 in each of the previous three months. Manufacturers added 37,000 jobs.

Alan Amdahl, who has run his own construction company in Sioux Falls, S.D., for three decades, said a mild winter helped contribute to a flurry of new remodeling jobs. He started hiring in January. “Our winter didn’t really exist,” he said. “It’s just incredible. People didn’t hibernate.” Economists also say the numbers can bounce around from month to month. Consistently creating 200,000 jobs a month is tough. The economy hasn’t put together four straight months of 200,000 or more new jobs since early 2000. Economists are still encouraged by the recent hiring trend: Each month from January through March has generated an average of 212,000 jobs.

Anthony Chan, chief economist at JP Morgan Wealth Management, noted strong growth among businesses that are especially sensitive to the economy’s health. Hotels and restaurants hired 39,000 workers. Manufacturers added 37,000. The factory hiring is especially welcome. Expanding factories create more jobs at the mines that produce raw materials, in warehouses and at trucking companies. Government jobs, which declined by an average of 22,000 a month last year, fell just 1,000 in March. An improving economy is generating tax revenue and easing budget problems at city halls and statehouses across the country. The March slowdown brings back painful memories of what happened in mid-2010 and again in 2011, when the economy lost momentum and job growth sputtered. Most investors didn’t have the chance to deliver a verdict on the report. The stock market was closed for Good Friday. Bond markets closed early. The job market had been on a recent roll. From December through February, the country added 734,000 jobs, an average of 245,000 each month. The only three-month stretch that was better since the recession ended was March through May 2010, when the government was hiring tens of thousands of temporary workers for the census. Companies across the country are hiring: Nimble Storage, a young information technology company in San Jose, Calif., is rapidly adding staff to keep up with demand for its data storage devices. Anup Singh, the company’s chief financial officer, said the explosive growth of data and the need for companies to store, analyze and deliver it is driving expansion. Nimble Storage has added 30 employees so far this year, bringing its workforce to 175. It expects to hire 70 more by the end of the year. The company is hiring engineers, sales people and customer-support staff. Landry & Kling Cruise Event Services in Miami, which arranges events on cruise ships, has added two workers this year and plans to hire two more. Sales are strong. “It’s like the floodgates are opening,” said CEO and co-founder Joyce Kling. “There’s an energy to our day now. We see a lot of leads floating through.” IdeaPaint, a company that makes washable paint that people can use erasable markers on, has hired seven workers in the last three months. Sales have risen sharply and are expected to keep rising. So the Ashland, Mass.-based company has more plans to hire — it has 31 employees now and expects to have 40 at the end of the year. “We just had a board meeting yesterday and agreed to become more aggressive with our hiring, with our advertising, with our investment spending. We’re very confident,” CEO Bob Munroe said. The unemployment rate has dropped from 9.1 percent last August to 8.2 percent last month, the lowest since Obama’s first month in the White House.

lion mark for the first time at the end of last year. Steven Wood, chief economist at Insight Economics, said February’s borrowing increase was strong. But he noted that it was the smallest increase since October. “Consumers still appear to be reluctant to use their credit cards,” Wood said in a note to clients. Other analysts said Americans might be opting to use cash instead of credit cards as a way to continue paying down their debt. Consumer spending rose in February by the most in seven months. Most consumers spent more of what they earned. The saving rate dropped to 3.7 percent of after-tax income in February. That was the lowest level since August 2009 and a full percentage point lower than all of last year. And they paid more for gas. The average price per gallon nationally has risen sharply from the start of this year. On Friday, it was $3.94 per gallon. Consumers are also taking on more debt at a time when their wages have not kept pace with inflation. The outlook for the economy looked a little less rosy on Friday after the government said hiring slowed sharply in March. Employers added just 120,000 jobs last month — half the December-February pace. The unemployment rate fell from 8.3 percent to 8.2 percent, the lowest since January 2009. Many economists blamed seasonal factors for much of Friday’s disappointing jobs report from the Labor Department. # Whose heroes? Obama constantly invokes GOP icons

SEEKING THE MIDDLE, OBAMA ARGUES FORMER REPUBLICAN PRESIDENTS WOULD BE GOP OUTSIDERS TODAY

KEN THOMAS
Associated Press

WASHINGTON | President Barack Obama is embracing an unlikely group of political icons as he tries to paint Mitt Romney as extreme: He’s praising Republican presidents from Abraham Lincoln to Dwight Eisenhower and Ronald Reagan.

The Democratic president typically offers up GOP leaders of the past as evidence of how both parties can work together in Washington to pursue big ideas and rebuild the economy. With Election Day seven months away, Obama hopes to persuade voters that he, like his Republican predecessors, is a reasonable moderate. At the same time, he’s casting Romney as a candidate who would embrace too-conservative policies out of step with most Americans and with their own party in years past.

Obama invoked Reagan’s name four times in a speech this week to The Associated Press annual meeting. He said the conservative hero, never accused of being a “tax-and-spend socialist,” still recognized the need for tax increases as well as spending cuts to tame federal deficits. Obama’s verdict: “He could not get through a Republican primary today.”

Painting Romney as an ideological extremist might seem a somewhat curious strategy for Obama given that the GOP nomination front-runner has been considered the moderate candidate in the Republican primary field and has struggled to consolidate support among conservatives in the party. But Obama’s team hopes to define Romney in a negative light before the former Massachusetts governor has a chance to pivot toward the general election and emphasize his past positions that could appeal to moderates of both parties and the independent voters who can decide close races in polarized America.

Obama has cited Reagan more than 40 times in speeches and public events since 2009, according to an analysis of public statements and transcripts by the AP. But Eisenhower is Obama’s favorite Republican for name-dropping — the president has referenced him more than 90 times. Lincoln is right behind with 80 mentions in public comments covered by the transcripts.

Among Democrats, Obama has cited Bill Clinton more than 60 times and Franklin Delano Roosevelt 45 times at public events. Jimmy Carter? Four times.

Romney, taking the same stage as Obama this week, a day later, told editors and publishers that the president was wrong. Reagan, he said, “would win handily in a primary, frankly, in all the primaries,” if he were running today. Romney accused Obama of “setting up a straw man to distract us from his record.”

Romney and his team say the president is trying to hide the fact that he’s a liberal who has promoted government programs instead of individual opportunity — the antithesis of Reagan. Obama, these Republicans contend, has failed to bridge partisan differences so he must resort to rhetoric at a time when people care more about the economy and gas prices.

On the flip side, Democrats see the drawn-out Republican primary and rise of tea party conservatives in 2010 as prevailing currents pushing Republican candidates away from the political center.

At fundraisers and in speeches, Obama often plays history professor, using Lincoln, Eisenhower and others to try to make his case.

Lincoln, Obama frequently notes, launched the transcontinental railroad and the National Academy of Sciences — efforts, he says, that mirror his own attempts to rebuild the nation’s economy and know-how. Obama points to Eisenhower’s role as the father of the Interstate Highway System and reminds people that Richard Nixon, hardly a darling of liberals, created the Environmental Protection Agency.

George W. Bush — a frequent target of criticism during Obama’s 2008 campaign — added prescription drug coverage to Medicare, the president told the AP annual meeting. George H.W. Bush was the first president to talk about a cap-and-trade system to curb pollution emissions — an approach that’s now political suicide in Republican circles.

There are other reminders. In December, Obama traveled to Osawatomie, Kan., to argue that middle class families face a “make-or-break moment,” echoing themes that Republican Theodore Roosevelt stressed in a 1910 speech in the same town.

On a Friday night in January, the White House released a photo of Obama sitting with President George H.W. Bush and his son, former Florida Gov. Jeb Bush, during a friendly get-together in the Oval Office.

About the only former Republican president who has taken heat from Obama is Rutherford B. Hayes, who Obama said questioned the usefulness of the telephone in the 1870s (something Hayes’ presidential center disputed).

But Reagan — beloved by Republicans of all stripes — is the one who gets special billing lately as Obama works to cobble together a winning coalition from across the political spectrum.

For Obama, there’s irony in his frequent Reagan references. In his 1995 book, “Dreams of My Father,” Obama wrote that when he told classmates of his decision to become a community organizer in Chicago in 1983, he would “pronounce on the need for change. Change in the White House, where Reagan and his minions were carrying on their dirty deeds.”

Egyptian ex-regime strongman announces presidential candidacy

AYA BATRAWY
Associated Press

CAIRO | A former strongman of ousted President Hosni Mubarak’s regime announced his presidential candidacy Friday, shaking up an already heated race that is emerging as a contest between two longtime rivals — former regime officials and Islamists who have surged in influence.

Omar Suleiman, one of the most powerful figures of Mubarak’s regime, had said earlier this week that he would not run. But he said he changed his mind after hundreds of people rallied in Cairo to support a bid.

The announcement drew outrage from youth activists who spearheaded the popular uprising that toppled Mubarak last year and have since been disappointed by the continued influence of members of his ex-regime. Liberals and revolutionaries have been largely squeezed out of the presidential race. Some have vowed to boycott the May 23-24 balloting altogether.

“I find it incomprehensible that one of the top figures of the old regime, who should be on trial right now as a criminal, is actually considering running for president,” said Mohammad Radwan, who took part in last year’s mass protests.

The 75-year-old former general must get 30,000 signatures by Sunday’s official filing deadline or the backing of at least 30 parliamentarians in order to run. Suleiman could be the ruling generals’ preferred candidate, someone who would try to keep the old political system intact and protect the privileges of the military.

Suleiman, who appeared on television on Feb. 11, 2011 to announce that Mubarak would step down and hand power to the country’s military leaders, served as Egypt’s intelligence chief for 18 years at a time when the regime was accused of carrying out torture and human rights abuses against dissenters. He also was longtime a confidant of Mubarak.

That makes him suspect in the eyes of many Egyptians, who had hoped to stamp out the old regime altogether and usher in a transition to democracy.

A win for Suleiman would largely keep control of Egypt in the hands of the military. Egypt’s last four presidents have all been military men.

His decision also was the latest surprise in the first presidential race since Mubarak was ousted after nearly 30 years in power.

THE THRILL OF A LIFETIME

TERRY PRATHER PHOTOS, THE LEDGER INDEPENDENT

Two of the three zip lines are 40 feet above the ground, and the third line, The Trio, measures 75 to 80 feet above the ground.

Fun and adventure at THE BIG ZIPPER

EXPERIENCE ZIP LINING RIGHT HERE AT HOME

MARLA TONCRAY
marla.toncra@lee.net

Weeeeeeeeeeeeeeeee!!!!
That pretty much sums up the sensation a person gets when experiencing zip lining. That and a really big smile.

And now, everyone in the Buffalo Trace Region has a chance to experience zip lining right here at home when the Big Zipper opens up to the public on April 13.

The Big Zipper is a series of three zip lines that take a person across 2,300 feet of treetops and rolling landscape situated on the property of Big Rock Off Road Park in eastern Mason County.

The course was designed and installed by Dagaz Acres from Rising Sun, Ind. Dagaz owner Patrick Noonan was at the course last Saturday to conduct training for zip line guides at the park. The day involved learning how to monitor the poles, wires and platforms for safety issues, and how to suit up customers in safety harness equipment before they ever get close to flying through the air.

The zip line course is designed in a triangle so customers return to essentially the same spot where they started.

Line 1 is 427 feet long, measures 40 feet above the ground and is named Pucker One. Line 2 is the longest line measuring 979 feet, is 40 feet about the ground and is named The Big Zipper. Line 3 is The Trio and is 722 feet long and 75-80 feet above ground. The Trio has become a quick favorite with the zip line guides and “guinea pig” customers that included my family members Mike, Bryant and Tara, and friends Holli, Danny, Deanna, Melissa and Ed.

According to Claire May, head zip guide, the course took two days to build; there is cable measuring six football field lengths; each line is one half inch thick; the minimum weight load of each line is 20,000 pounds; and the lines have a 5 percent grade. The utility poles are eight to 10 feet deep in the ground and the anchor cables are five to seven feet deep.

Dagaz Acres has 10 zip lines and two bridges, however, the longest line at the Rising Sun location is 100 feet shorter than Big Zipper’s Pucker One line.

At The Big Zipper, zip liners climb a platform to get harnessed to the wire, and then off they go, sailing through the air to the landing spot at the end of the wire.

Sounds easy enough right?

It is, but only after first going through a safety training exercise to make sure everyone’s equipment is on properly and everyone has passed “Ground School.”

The rules at The Big Zipper call for groups of six to keep things moving. Two zip line guides are assigned to the group to insure that safety harnesses, safety hooks and the zip line pulley are installed properly before anyone takes off the platform.

After being suited up in a body harness, guides take you to Ground School located next to Pucker One. Once there, the guides demonstrate how the safety hook and pulley are attached to the wire, how a person should hold their body while gliding through the air, how to stop at the end of line and how to “monkey walk” your way backwards — just in case you get stuck and need to make it back to the platform. After the guide finishes up, each customer then goes through the drill to become familiar with the sensation of being suspended from the cable.

Then it’s on to the first line and a chance to fly through the air at rapid speeds, and have the thrill of a lifetime.

The Big Zipper opens Friday, April 13 at 5:30 p.m. Reservations are required in advance by going to www.bigrockoffroad-park.com/thebigzipper or Facebook.com/bigzipper or calling 606-564-8283. The cost is $20 per person.

Seasonal hours from April 13 to May 20 are Friday, 5:30-9 p.m.; Saturdays and Sundays 9:30 a.m. to 7:30 p.m.; The Big Zipper will be open every day beginning May 21.

The Big Zipper has received certification from Association of Challenge Course Technology and Dagaz Acres is an ACCT certified designer.

To watch video footage of The Big Zipper, go to www.maysville-online.com and scroll down the home page to “Videos”.

Claire May, head zip guide at The Big Zipper, makes it look easy as she sails through the air.

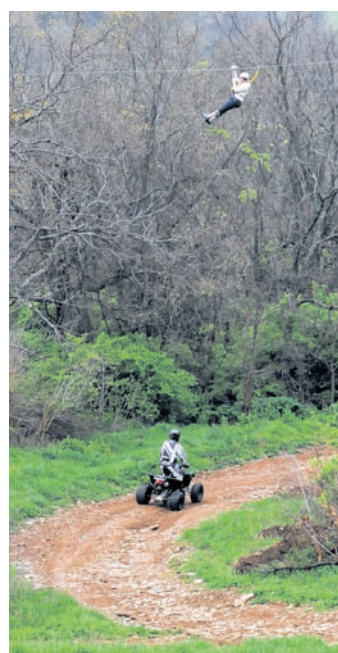

Learning proper technique, safety equipment and how to “monkey walk” are all part of the zip lining “Ground School.”

Left: Zip line guide Leslie Cropper fills out her liability waiver, which is required of all customers.

Current TV countersues Olbermann, seeks damages

SAYS HOST HAS DAMAGED NETWORK, BREACHED CONTRACT

ANTHONY MCCARTNEY
AP Entertainment Writer

LOS ANGELES | Current TV offered its rebuttal to a scathing lawsuit filed by Keith Olbermann by filing a countersuit Friday detailing alleged bad behavior by its former talk show host and seeking a judge's ruling that he is not entitled to any more money from the network.

The network's filing accuses Olbermann of breaching his contract by disclosing terms of the lucrative deal, refusing to cooperate in promoting the show and taking days off without permission.

The countersuit comes one day after Olbermann sued his former employer, claiming it violated his agreement, engaged in shoddy production values and owed him more than $50 million.

"Current seeks a determination that it is no longer obligated to pay a dime to Mr. Olbermann who, having already been paid handsomely for showing up sporadically and utterly failing to keep his end of the bargain, now seeks to be paid tens of millions more for not working at all," the filing states.

The network and Olbermann have been at odds for months, and the dispute has escalated in the days since the former "Countdown" host was fired last week.

Olbermann's attorney Patricia Glaser said of Current's countersuit: "No merit. No defense. And in our view, no problem."

Current's suit claims Olbermann has damaged the network and will continue to do so. It seeks unspecified damages.

The networks' filing paints Olbermann as a petulant figure after he was hired to be Current's signature host, rejecting seven limousine companies, refusing to cooperate in promotional discussions and taking vacations with little notice. The complaint claims Olbermann wrote to Current co-founder Joel Hyatt to complain about a problem with a guest, "Give me a name so I know which of them to kill with my bare hands," and threw a glass mug on the set, which prompted a complaint from the set's landlord.

In this May 3, 2012 file photo, Keith Olbermann poses at the Ronald Reagan Library in Simi Valley, Calif. Current TV has dismissed Keith Olbermann from its talk-show lineup after less than a year, Friday, March 30, 2012.

After two days of court filings, it was clear neither side was pulling punches in its description of the other. Olbermann's lawsuit repeatedly attacked the network and described Hyatt and co-founder Al Gore as "dilettantes portraying entertainment industry executives."

"Olbermann deeply regrets his decision to put his trust in Hyatt and Gore," the lawsuit claims.

"Current had neither the desire nor the ability to produce a first rate news commentary show. Olbermann did not join Current to ruin his hard-won reputation and appear on a show that was an embarrassment."

His lawsuit described a litany of technical issues, including shoddy equipment that wouldn't work if it rained, "terrible sound and filming" of the show, segments that abruptly dropped off the air, busted teleprompters and an earpiece that repeatedly malfunctioned.

Current's filing Friday claims Olbermann refused to cooperate in discussions about improving the set, and in general refused to promote the network.

Olbermann's lawsuit denied several of the claims, including that he leaked information about his contract and that his absences were unauthorized.

The former host, who claims he may be owed $70 million or more when the case is over, took to Twitter after reading Current's countersuit.

"After reading the Current filing my attorneys and I think it should be subtitled 'How To Try To Pound The Table ... And Miss,'" Olbermann posted.

Airline employee resigns amid celeb tip-off claims

VIRGIN ATLANTIC EMPLOYEE RESIGNS; REPORTS SAY SHE ALERTED PAPARAZZI TO 60+ CELEBRITY FLYERS

RAPHAEL SATTER
Associated Press

LONDON | A Virgin Atlantic employee has resigned following allegations she routinely fed information about the airline's celebrity clientele — from Madonna to Sienna Miller — to a paparazzi agency.

The employee was a junior member of the team that looks after high-profile clients, Virgin said Friday. She quit Thursday before reports published in the Guardian and the Press Gazette alleged that she had passed the booking information of more than 60 celebrities on to the Big Pictures photo agency.

Among those allegedly targeted: Britain's Princess Beatrice; singers Madonna and Rihanna; actors Charlize Theron, Kate Winslet, Daniel Radcliffe and Miller; comedians Sacha Baron Cohen and Russell Brand; and a slew of U.K. celebrities and sports figures.

The Guardian and the Press Gazette cited messages allegedly sent by the employee to someone at Big Pictures Ltd. as the basis for their stories.

The Associated Press had no immediate way of verifying the authenticity of the messages, but the Guardian said it had carried out checks confirming that at least some of the celebrities had traveled to the destinations mentioned in the emails.

Calls and emails to representatives of around a dozen of the celebrities mentioned went unanswered Friday, a public holiday in Britain. A representative for Princess Beatrice declined comment, while Kate Winslet's publicist, Heidi Slan, said the star wasn't reachable.

In a statement, Virgin Atlantic Airways Ltd. called the allegations "extremely serious" and said it had launched an investigation. The airline, which is majority-owned by billionaire adventurer Richard Branson, confirmed that high-profile clients were involved but declined to comment on the British newspapers' figures.

A man who answered the phone at London-based Big Pictures hung up when an Associated Press reporter identified himself as a member of the media. Emails sent to company founder Darryn Lyons' personal assistant weren't immediately returned, and no one answered the door at Big Pictures' central London office.

The Press Gazette said Big Pictures was first approached for comment more than 48 hours ago but has yet to respond.

Neither Virgin nor the newspapers identified the employee in question. The Guardian said it had contacted her on Wednesday and that she had declined comment.

It was not clear Friday if authorities had become involved. Virgin refused to say whether it had called in the police and a Scotland Yard spokesman said he wasn't aware of the leak.

The Information Commissioner's office — which investigates data breaches in Britain — said in a statement that the agency will need to make further inquiries "to establish the precise nature of the alleged incident before deciding what action, if any, needs to be taken."

The past year has seen the sometimes underhanded methods of Britain's media thrust into the spotlight by a scandal over phone hacking at the now-defunct News of the World.

Paparazzi have come under particular scrutiny, with public figures including Miller alleging aggressive, intimidating or illegal behavior on the part of celebrity-obsessed snappers.

Miller, who testified before a judge-led inquiry into media ethics set up in the wake of the scandal, said she had been terrorized by photographers stalking her every move.

"I would often find myself — I was 21 — at midnight running down a dark street on my own with ten big men chasing me and the fact that they had cameras in their hands meant that that was legal," she told the inquiry.

"But if you take away the cameras, what have you got? You've got a pack of men chasing a woman and obviously that's a very intimidating situation to be in."

Surveillance cameras watch over the entrance to the London offices of paparazzi agency Big Pictures on Friday, April 6, 2012. A Virgin Atlantic airline employee has resigned following allegations she routinely fed information about the airline's celebrity clientele to the Big Pictures agency, the airline announced Friday.

Lyons, the founder of Big Pictures, told the same inquiry he had "no reason" to believe his photographers broke rules in pursuit of pictures, batting away suggestions that paparazzi victimize their targets.

"The fact of the matter is that celebrities court publicity when they want to court publicity and then all of a sudden they want to switch it off very, very soon after," he told the inquiry.

"If you are in the public eye, you are looked up to," he added. "We live in a world of voyeurism."

Associated Press writers Cassandra Vinograd in London and Nekesa Mumbi Moody in New York contributed to this report.

HOW YOU SEE IT

BEWARE OF PROTESTORS

There was a group in Maysville yesterday who was passing out their literature lambasting our President, Obama. I am not sure this is legal. Did they get a permit to do this from the police or city? If this is allowed they will be back and bring their friends with them. Beware.

PARADE IS IN ORDER

I think the city, county or Chamber of Commerce should do something special such as a parade to honor Darius Mill-er with his accomplishments.

TO TAG OR NOT TO TAG

Do the post office vehicles have to have tags? I saw one driving up U.S. 68 with no tags.

NASTY POLITICS? REALLY?

Journalists seem to think that Romney will become nasty in his attacks this fall. How could he get worse? He has been attacking for the last six months. We need to beware of a man who is buying his way through to the presidency.

USEFUL INFORMATION

It is pretty sad to think of the people who really need pain killers and then those who abuse the use of them will jeopardize the ability of people to get these prescriptions. The article today was enlightening.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

VOTING BY PAPER BALLOT TRADITIONAL IN BTADD

Dear editor,

Because the office of the mayor of the city of Vanceburg and myself personally have been mentioned prominently in reference to an Open Meetings issue involving the appointment of a Buffalo Trace Area Development District Board member, I feel it is appropriate to respond to these allegations.

In addition to mayors and county judges in the Buffalo Trace area, citizen members make up an important part of the Buffalo Trace Board. Citizen members are nominated by the mayors and judges in their respective counties. If the county judge and mayor disagree on a citizen nominee, then the nominees proposed are voted on by the board membership. Judge Massie and I are members of the board who are entitled to vote. I attended the February 21 meeting where the vote on the citizen board member was conducted; Judge Massie elected not to attend the meeting.

Judge Massie made written allegations that the Buffalo Trace Area Development District Board improperly conducted the Feb. 21 meeting. The citizen member nominated by Judge Massie to the board was not elected. The citizen member I nominated was elected to the board. After his complaint to the Buffalo Trace Board, Mr. Massie appealed to the Office of the Attorney General, making a number of complaints of alleged violations of the Kentucky Open Meeting Law.

Despite the numerous complaints and allegations by Mr. Massie, the only fault found by Attorney Amy Bensenhaver of the Attorney General's Office was that the election of the citizen board member should not have been conducted by paper ballot, but presumably by a voice vote or a roll call vote. No one has suggested that a voice vote would have changed the outcome of the vote. Technically, however, the Attorney General's decision says the paper ballot is not the proper procedure to conduct the vote.

The paper ballot form of voting on board members at the Buffalo Trace ADD has apparently been a custom for many years. I assume the custom of paper ballot voting will now be changed. There is no other real affect of the Attorney General's findings, unless the Board decides to re-vote for the candidates by voice or roll call vote.

It is not my intent to minimize any alleged violation of the open meeting law. But it should be clear that the Attorney General did not in any way personally implicate any member of the board of any violation of the law.

Sincerely,
Todd Ruckel — Mayor of Vanceburg

Thoughts to live by on Easter and every day

Throughout our area — as in the rest of the world — people will gather Sunday to commemorate the holiest of occasions for Christians, the crucifixion and resurrection of Jesus Christ. It is a time for reflection, renewal and rebirth, and a time to reaffirm our faith.

As we pause to celebrate this most holy of events, may we offer our readers the reflection of others on Easter:

The resurrection gives my life meaning and direction and the opportunity to start over no matter what my circumstances. — Robert Flatt

Easter says you can put truth in a grave, but it won't stay there. — Clarence W. Hall

The joyful news that He is risen does not change the contemporary world. Still before us lie work, discipline, sacrifice. But the fact of Easter gives us the spiritual power to do the work, accept the discipline, and make the sacrifice. — Henry Knox Sherrill

Easter is the demonstration of God that life is essentially spiritual and timeless. — Charles M. Crowe

Let every man and woman count himself immortal. Let him catch the revelation of Jesus in his resurrection. Let him say not merely, “Christ is risen,” but “I shall rise.” — Phillips Brooks

On Easter Day the veil between time and eternity thins to gossamer. — Douglas Horton

Easter spells out beauty, the rare beauty of new life. — S.D. Gordon

Easter is not a time for groping through dusty, musty tomes or tombs to disprove spontaneous generation or even to prove life eternal. It is a day to fan the ashes of dead hope, a day to banish doubts and seek the slopes where the sun is rising, to revel in the faith which transports us out of ourselves and the dead past into the vast and inviting unknown. — Author unknown, as quoted in the Lewiston Tribune

Where man sees but withered leaves, God sees sweet flowers growing. — Albert Lighton

He takes men out of time and makes them feel eternity. — Ralph Waldo Emerson

For I remember it is Easter morn,
And life and love and peace are all new born. — Alice Freeman Palmer

Thou art the Sun of other days.
They shine by giving back the rays. — John Keble, The Christian Year: Easter Days

See the land, her Easter keeping,
Rises as her Maker rose.
Seeds, so long in darkness sleeping,
Burst at last from winter snows.
Earth with heaven above rejoices... — Charles Kingsley

‘Twas Easter-Sunday. The full-blossomed trees
Filled all the air with fragrance and with joy. — Henry Wadsworth Longfellow, Spanish Student

Once more to new creation Awake, and death gainsay,
For death is swallowed up of life,
And Christ is risen today
— George Newell Lovejoy

Let the resurrection joy lift us from loneliness and weakness and despair to strength and beauty and happiness. — Floyd W. Tomkins

There is not room for Death,
Nor atom that his might could render void:
Thou — Thou art Being and Breath,
And what Thou art may never be destroyed. — Emily Bronte

And he departed from our sight that we might return to our heart, and there find Him. For He departed, and behold, He is here. — St. Augustine

The story of Easter is the story of God's wonderful window of divine surprise. — Carl Knudsen

Our Lord has written the promise of the resurrection, not in books alone, but in every leaf in spring-time. — Martin Luther

Easter tells us that life is to be interpreted not simply in terms of things but in terms of ideals. — Charles M. Crowe

God expects from men something more than at such times, and that it were much to be wished for the credit of their religion as well as the satisfaction of their conscience that their Easter devotions would in some measure come up to their Easter dress. — Robert South, Sermons

POLITICAL COMMENTARY

Meltdown with Keith Olbermann

RICH LOWRY

First as tragedy, then as farce doesn't quite capture the history of Olbermann's serial dismissals and poisonous exits. It's farce over and over again.

There was only one way for the marriage between Keith Olbermann and Al Gore to end: in acrimony and, very likely, in court.

Olbermann, the former ESPN, Fox Sports Net and MSNBC (twice) anchor, is now a former Current TV anchor. He is to anchoring gigs what Zsa Zsa Gabor is to marriage. The left-wing commentator joined the network started by the left-wing former vice president in an arrangement that both conceived of as a way to stick it to The Man, particularly The Man who runs The Corporate Media.

Olbermann gushed upon his hiring that Current would offer “news that is produced independently of corporate interference,” in a “model truth-seeking entity.” Gore bragged about his network's ability to give Olbermann an “independent platform and freedom.” It turns out that both might have benefited from the discipline of a harsh corporate overlord, since Olbermann didn't always show up for work and Gore couldn't keep the lights on in Olbermann's studio.

First as tragedy, then as farce doesn't quite capture the history of Olbermann's serial dismissals and poisonous exits. It's farce over and over again. If Olbermann were to join Wayne and Garth as a co-host of “Wayne's World” on the local public-access channel in Aurora, Ill., it wouldn't be long before Olbermann denounced Wayne's taste in heavy metal, complained about Garth's inordinate airtime and quit to start his own show with the public-access channel up the road in DeKalb.

Olbermann is the termagant of the left, whose on-air biliousness is apparently not an act. He gives limousine liberals a bad name, since the stereotypical representative of the breed is at least satisfied with his car and his driver. According to published reports, Olbermann kept complaining about the car services contracted to ferry him to work to issue populist jeremiads in favor of Occupy Wall Street.

Olbermann had a contract for $50 million over five years, a confirmation of the axiom that no matter how much someone derides corporate greed, he wants to make as much money as possible, ideally for as little effort as possible. Current had trouble getting Olbermann to show up to do coverage on election nights despite his status as the network's “chief news officer.”

Although that was a little like being designated a rear admiral in the Swiss navy. Calling Current TV a network is an insult to networks that people know how to find on their TVs. Current could broadcast the Super Bowl and it would be half-time before people could track it down with their remotes — if, that is, their cable systems carried it at all.

Olbermann must have thought that he was Edward R. Murrow — the legendary CBS newsmen whose signature sign-off he aped — trapped in the body of a local newscaster in a very minor media market. He had a million viewers at MSNBC. At Current, he had 100,000 in the key 25-to-54 demographic last summer, before dwindling to 30,000, according to The Daily Beast. He probably could have reached as many people standing on a soapbox at Times Square on any given night, without having to sweat Current's amateurish production values.

Now it's all over but the litigation and revenge: Current fired Olbermann, and Olbermann is ready to sue Current and expose Al Gore's alleged outrages against decency. It's hard to see what Gore did to deserve the storm of toxicity Olbermann is about to bring down on his head. Except, of course, he did hire Keith Olbermann.

The ill-fated adventure was always misconceived. Corporate media doesn't need to be countered by the likes of Current. The big, bad corporations give us the entire monochromatic media gamut, from the thinly disguised biases of the broadcast networks to the nightly progressive ululating on MSNBC. Current isn't a breakthrough, it's a redundancy. And now it has the same angry former anchor as corporate-owned MSNBC. Good night and good luck.

Discovery of father’s secret life can’t be kept quiet

DEAR ABBY: I am a teenager who has recently discovered that my dad has been having sexually explicit conversations with women online for at least 10 years. He is usu-ally withdrawn from the rest of the family, and I strongly suspect it’s because he cares more about his online fanta-sies than he does about his life with my brothers, my mother and me.

DEAR ABBY

I don’t know what to do. I can no longer look him in the eye. I don’t respect him; I pity him. I’m afraid to tell anyone in my fam-ily because of the drama it will cause, and don’t want to tell him because I know it will change our relation-ship. Still, I don’t think I can keep this to myself.

I have considered see-ing a therapist, but I don’t know how I can do that without giving my parents an explanation about why I’m going. What do you think I should do? — CON-FLICTED TEEN IN NEW YORK

DEAR CONFLICTED: You have been exposed to a large dose of information you shouldn’t have, and for that you have my sympathy. If you feel you need to dis-cuss this with a therapist, then you definitely should.

As I see it, you have several options. The first would be to talk to a coun-selor at school and ask if counseling is available that way. If it isn’t, then tell your father you need it, and why. And if he refuses, tell your mother everything.

DEAR ABBY: I’m a 23-year-old college junior, double-majoring in English and education. Although I am pretty advanced in my degree field, I’m having second thoughts about my decision. Every day it seems as if I invest all my time and energy into something I don’t even want to be a part of.

I have a very adventur-ous spirit. I want to con-stantly be doing, going and discovering. Part of me says I’m an adult and I should ignore the explorer part of me. But it’s hard to say that change isn’t pos-sible because we’re talking the rest of my life. How can I connect passion with occupa-tion — especially at this stage of the game? — GYPSY SOUL

DEAR GYPSY SOUL: By think-ing out of the box. There are various options in the field of education, and one of them is teaching English in foreign countries. Start looking for opportunities in that area, and you may be able to also fulfill your urge for adventure. Another option that comes to mind would be joining the Peace Corps or Teach for Amer-ica. Please consider what I am suggesting and do some research on your own.

DEAR ABBY: Is it ever proper to wear your nap-kin tucked into your shirt collar when dining out, instead of placing it on your lap? Traditionally, a napkin is placed on the lap to prevent soiling of the clothing, I would guess. But some plus-sized folks and women with large bus-tlines don’t usually have food reach their laps, just their shirts. So what do you think? — JUST WONDER-ING IN NEW JERSEY

DEAR JUST WONDER-ING: Your napkin belongs in your lap when dining out, regardless of what size you are. According to Emily Post, “an exception can be made for the elderly or in-firm.” So if you are neither of those, consider carrying a stain remover “pen” with you in case there is a slip twixt the fork and the lip.

AWARDS PRESENTED BY DAR: DAR Good Citizenship awards were presented to Morgan Sarget, Ronald LeForge, Jarrod McCall, Patton Kern, and Mary Alice Stewart for 2012.

DAR Good Citizenship awards presented

Outstanding eighth and 12th grade students were honored by the Limestone Chapter Daughters of the American Revolution on March 18, 2012 at Paxton Inn.

Annually, Limestone Chapter recognizes stu-dents from the Mason County and St. Patrick Schools who portray the outstanding qualities of dependability, ser-vice, leadership and pa-triotism. The senior DAR Good Citizen medal re-cipients were Mary Alice Stewart, Mason County High School, and Edward Patton Kern, St. Patrick High School. The eighth grade Good Citizenship medal honorees were Jar-rod McCall, St. Patrick School, along with Mor-gan Leigh Sargent and Ronald William LeForge, Mason County Middle School.

Mary Alice Stewart is the daughter of Alex-ander and Pam Stewart of Maysville. She is ac-tive in FCCLA where she has served as chapter, regional, and state presi-dent. She is president of the National Honor Society, vice president of Champions Against Drugs, and serves on the Regional Coalition for Drug Prevention. She was a 2011 Kentucky Gover-nor’s Scholar. She plans to attend the University of Kentucky to study at the Gatton School of Busi-ness.

Patton Kern is the son of Martha and Eddie Kern of Brooksville. He is a member of FBLA, base-ball team, academic team, National Honor Society, and Student Council. He plans to attend the University of Kentucky and major in chemical engineering, then attend medical school.

Jarrod McCall is the son of Rick and Sandy McCall. He enjoys basketball, soc-cer, playing video games, listening to music, going to the movies, and tex-ting. He mentors second graders and is actively involved in the school’s recycling program.

Morgan Sargent is the daughter of Tim and Jenni Sargent of Maysville. She participates in volley-ball, softball, and track. She sings in the choir and plays the violin. She is an active member of Crosspoint Community Church where she leads music and plays the piano in the youth group. Her hobbies include read-ing, playing the piano, painting, and spending time with her friends and family.

Ronald LeForge is the son of Mary and Lance LeForge. He is a member of the Church of the Na-tivity. He is a Boy Scout and holds the rank of First Class. He is a member of the MCMS band and plays both tenor and alto saxo-phone. In his spare time, he enjoys listing to and playing music, spend-ing time with friends and family, and performing magic shows.

CAUGHT IN THE MIDDLE

The middle layer of the eye, known as the "uvea," is made up of the iris, ciliary body, and choroids. Inflammation of the uvea is known as "uveitis," and it most commonly occurs among young and middle-aged individuals. It may be associated with autoimmune disease and many different systemic disorders, but it also occurs in healthy people for no apparent cause. Depending on the type of uveitis and where it is found, symptoms may include light sensitivity, de-creased visual acuity, and eye pain or blurred vision and floaters (intermediate and posterior uveitis); di-fuse uveitis may cause a combination of all these symptoms. Because failure to treat uveitis may result in vision loss, it is important to see an ophthalmologist.

At KENTUCKY EYE IN-STITUTE, we are happy to answer all your ques-tions about eye health and conditions such as uveitis, and we will work with you to find the most convenient appointment. Please call 606.759.7883 or 800.658.7282 today. We possess high personal and professional standards, impeccable integrity, and exceptional knowledge in all facets of eye care. # Interfaith ‘pilgrims’ circle world on faith quest

GILLIAN FLACCUS
Associated Press

CLAREMONT, Calif. | Frederic and Anne-Laure Pascal are devout Roman Catholics who built their lives around their religion. When she lost her job last year, the young couple decided on an unlikely expression of their religious commitment: a worldwide “interfaith pilgrimage” to places where peace has won out over dueling dog-mas.

Since October, the French couple has visited 11 nations from Iraq to Malaysia in an odyssey to find people of all creeds who have dedicated their lives to overcoming religious intolerance in some of the world’s most divided and war-torn corners.

The husband-and-wife team blogs about their adventures — and their own soul-searching — and takes short video clips for the project they’ve dubbed the Faithbook Tour.

The Pascals travel on a shoestring budget, kept afloat by 115 individual donors who are mostly friends and family. They say their travels are meant to illuminate examples of hope and peace in a world that is too often torn apart by faith-driven fervor. Their conversation, in a mix of French and English, is peppered with quotes from Mahatma Gandhi, ancient Chinese proverb and references to their inspiration, St. Francis of Assisi.

They began the three-week U.S. leg of their trip late last month after arriving in California jetlagged from Japan and will visit Israel before hanging up their backpacks.

“There is a saying, ‘A tree that falls makes more noise than a forest that grows.’ My aim was to meet the people who make the forest grow and not the people who make the tree fall,” said Frederic, 29, as the couple took

In this March 28 photo, Frederic and Anne-Laure Pascal stroll through a garden at Claremont Lincoln University, an interreligious graduate institute in Claremont, Calif. The young French couple has been traveling the world for the past five months, from Africa to Malaysia to Italy to visit interfaith projects and initiatives around the world. They then blog about their experiences and have attracted a following for what they call their “interfaith pilgrimage.”

a break during a recent visit to Claremont Lincoln University, an interreligious graduate institute in Southern California. “We have to be the mirror to reflect their light.”

On its face, the project seems almost naive, but in practice, the Pascals’ blend of religious journalism and personal exploration has brought them face-to-face with some of the world’s top religious thinkers and deposited them in some of the most forgotten parts of the planet.

In their five months on the road, the couple has trekked through the Sahel in the West African nation of Burkina Faso, explored interfaith schools in the slums of Cairo and traveled across the Iraqi desert in the dead of night to reach a camp dedicated to Christian and Muslim children.

Along the way, they have felt their own faith deepen.

“What really hit me in Egypt is the Muslim call to prayer. The more I heard that call, the more I was called back to my own faith and the more I asked myself, ‘How do I pray? Do I pray regularly? Am I faithful in my prayer or not?’” said Anne-Laure, 28. “There were a lot of things like that where, in meeting others, we were brought back our own faith and how we live our faith.”

The idea for the trip came last year after Anne-Laure’s contract as a librarian at the Catholic University in Lille wasn’t renewed. Frederic decided to take a sabbatical from his job editing dozens of parish newsletters. The couple, who met a decade ago through a youth group, delayed plans to buy a house and start a family and instead spent 10 months narrowing down what countries they would visit and setting up a foundation to finance their travels.

They started their tour in October in Assisi, Italy, to coincide with the 25th anniversary of Pope John Paul II’s World Day of Prayer for Peace, a 1986 gathering of a rainbow of international religious leaders. From there, the Pascals set out to visit interfaith projects in nearly a dozen nations, including Tunisia, Algeria, Burkina Faso, Egypt, Lebanon, Iraq, India, Japan, Malaysia, the U.S. and Israel.

Over thousands of miles, the two have met with impoverished Christians and Muslims in the West African nation of Burkina Faso who work together to trap rainwater and maintain holding ponds in parched desert landscape; mingled with Sri Lankan leaders at a lay Buddhist monastery in Kyushu, Japan; and stayed for a week with oppressed Christian families living in the Iraqi autonomous region of Kurdistan.

In the U.S., they began their visit touring classrooms and talking with students at Claremont Lincoln, an interreligious graduate school 30 miles east of Los Angeles where students of all faiths study together in a unique experiment that began last year. They will also stop in San Francisco, New York, Washington, D.C., Richmond, Va., and Philadelphia before heading to Israel next month.

Grown-up gators a challenge for Missouri town

GATHERING NO EASY TASK 14 MONTHS
AFTER MAN SOLD 50 BABY ONES

JIM SALTER
Associated Press

ST. LOUIS | The 50 baby alligators were cute little critters, each roughly the size of a pencil, when a Colorado man sold them out of a trailer in the parking lot of the Kennett Eagles Club in southeast Missouri.

Fourteen months later, Kennett authorities are worried about what's become of those animals.

"Now they've grown and they're not cute anymore," Humane Department officer Tina Petix said. "They're trying to bite people."

So Petix is on a gator hunt, hoping to convince any owners that small-town Missouri life is neither good for the reptile nor the people and pets it may encounter.

So far, three alligators have been located and removed. One woman was keeping two as pets, often in a backyard next to a home where 3-year-old twins live. The other nearly snapped off its owner's hand.

Petix has no idea how many gators Ken Henderson sold in January and February 2011, when he set up a makeshift shop and sold exotic creatures out of his trailer.

A nearly catastrophic fire in February 2011 ended his stay. Police believe one of the animals kicked over a heat lamp, setting the trailer ablaze. Henderson and rescuers scurried to save the creatures, including iguanas, alligators and a 13-foot python.

"It was like Noah's Ark," Petix recalled.

Henderson was treated for burns and some of the animals were injured and turned over to animal rescue groups.

But the extended fallout from the sale of the alligators is less certain. Petix also doesn't know how many survived or are even still in Kennett, a town with laws governing exotic pets, including a ban on alligators.

American alligators are native to Florida, Louisiana and other southern states, and the closest they come to Missouri in the wild is Arkansas. Winters are simply too cold, said Jeff Ettling, curator of herpetology and aquatics at the St. Louis Zoo.

Experts say alligators also are not suited to be pets, in part because they're expensive to feed. Baby gators eat crickets and other bugs, but a 1-year-old gator needs several pounds of meat each day.

In this Thursday, April 5, 2012 photo provided by the Kennett Humane Department, Steve Brown, president of the St. Louis Herpetological Society, holds a young alligator in Cape Girardeau, Mo. The alligator is one of around 50 allegedly sold by a man passing through southeast Missouri about 14 months ago when the animals were roughly the size of a pencil.

And, of course, there's the inherent danger — alligators will eat fish and snakes, but also pets or "anything they can swallow," Ettling said, and gators often have a nasty attitude.

"As they grow in size, their disposition changes," Ettling said. "Like a lion cub as it gets big, it's got wild instincts."

Petix's alligator amnesty yielded immediate results last week when a woman brought in a 34-inch gator that her father had purchased from Henderson for her teenage son.

"He thought it would be a cute pet," Petix said. "When she went to feed it the last couple of times, it jumped and just about bit her arm. That's when she said, 'We can't do this anymore.'"

The alligator was turned over to volunteers with the St. Louis Herpetological Society. It wasn't clear what happened to the animal after that, and the society didn't return phone messages.

Two children, one in elementary school, lived in the home with the woman who owned two alligators, Petix said. She kept them inside most of the time, but did allow them in the backyard. In addition to the toddler twins next door, other children live in the neighborhood.

The woman had been known to take the gators — now roughly 3 feet long — for walks on leashes.

After repeated conversations with Petix, the woman gave up the alligators, though she refused to tell city officials what she did with them. Petix declined to identify the owners.

Henderson, in his late 60s, travels parts of the country showing and selling exotic animals. He had stopped in Kennett before, in 2009, and earned the nickname "The Alligator Man." Henderson did not respond to interview requests.

He doesn't face charges in Kennett related to selling gators, though police quickly told him to move on after the fire.

But Henderson was arrested last summer in Columbia, Mo., after bringing his animals to a fair. He is scheduled to stand trial there on seven misdemeanor counts of keeping a dangerous wild animal without registering with police next month.

Henderson's attorney, Kevin O'Brien, said it is wrong to blame Henderson for selling alligators, noting that they are readily available at pet stores.

Petix said she may never know if all of the alligators will be turned in, but she'll be glad when her job returns to normal.

"I'm used to dealing with cats and dogs, not alligators," she said.

Gary Parkes, president of the PTA at Carmel Elementary School stands in an empty classroom in Woodstock, Ga. By any measure, the PTA is one of the most venerable and iconic of America's volunteer-based nonprofits. But membership has dropped steadily over the past 10 years and for some parents, the PTA's advocacy work is cause for annoyance.

National PTA seeks to reverse drop in membership

DAVID CRARY
AP National Writer

When Otha Thornton, president-elect of the National PTA, signed up to help lead the PTA at Maryland's Meade Senior High School in 2005, the chapter had about 25 members. Within two years, membership soared to 400 as the school community mobilized to boost morale and academic performance. Now he's trying to rekindle that spirit on a larger scale as the PTA strives to reverse a steady decrease in its national membership.

"I tell parents: 'Other people are making choices for you and your children. We need you at the table,'" said Thornton, who will become the National PTA's first male African-American leader next year.

By any measure, the PTA is one of the most venerable and iconic of America's volunteer-based nonprofits. It was founded in 1897 as the National Congress of Mothers and at its peak in the 1960s claimed about 12 million members.

Membership plummeted in the late '60s and 1970s, in part because of the racial rifts caused by school desegregation, then stabilized. But it has dropped steadily over the past 10 years from about 6 million to under 5 million.

Demography is part of the reason: Compared to the PTA's heyday, there are more single parents and working mothers now who feel they can't spare extra time for engagement at their children's schools.

But the PTA's shrinkage can't be explained only by such factors, given that parents are active at tens of thousands of schools in independent parent-teacher organizations not affiliated with the PTA. Factors driving this trend include frustration with having to pay state and national PTA dues, and disenchantment with the PTA's role as a vocal advocate on such issues as charter schools, juvenile justice and home-schooling.

"We're still strong, but it is a concern," the current national president, Betsy Landers, said of the membership decline. "We've chosen to try to attack it in several different ways."

One initiative involves expanded use of social media. Members are being kept up-to-date via podcasts on National PTA Radio, some meetings and training sessions are being conducted through Skype, and members with expertise as bloggers or tweeters are being recruited as "social media ambassadors" to enhance the PTA's online presence.

Landers, of Germantown, Tenn., hopes these tactics will help cut costs while also enticing more parents to join.

"We're really trying to give our members the information they seek in a way they prefer," she said.

Thornton, a retired Army colonel who now works as a senior analyst for General Dynamics in Georgia, said other membership-boosting strategies include encouraging urban parents to be more involved in their local schools, expanding outreach to rural schools, and training a new wave of leaders from minority groups.

For Thornton, 44, his PTA mission is intertwined with his family history — a Georgia family that refused to let borderline poverty derail the quest for college education.

"Education was a way out," Thornton said. "When I had kids, it was very important for me to be involved and be sure they got the best education possible."

While Thornton and Landers say the PTA needs to be creative with new membership strategies, one change that's not on the cards is any backing away from the PTA's role as lobbyist on behalf of children and public schools. Among many causes over the years, it has campaigned for better nutrition in school cafeterias, fought to sustain arts programs, called for more empathetic treatment of juvenile offenders, and voiced wariness about school vouchers and for-profit charter schools.

"Advocacy is really the heart of what we do — we're seen as the go-to people on parent engagement," said Landers, who's been active in the PTA since 1989.

She said the PTA's full-time lobbyists on Capitol Hill are reinforced by a vast network of members nationwide who, when mobilized by email, will contact their own members of Congress.

"Any association that takes a stand, there will always be some members who disagree," Landers said. "Any stand we take is decided by membership ... It's not made by staff, not made in Washington. It's made by the grass roots."

For some parents, however, the PTA's advocacy work is cause for annoyance rather than pride.

"I don't feel the PTA's mission and our mission are the same," said Gary Parkes, president of the PTA at Carmel Elementary School in Woodstock, Ga. "Parents think they're joining to be involved with the kids at their school, and they're really becoming part of a massive political action committee."

Annual dues are another source of disgruntlement. The individual dues for National PTA membership may seem modest — they were increased last year, for the first time since 2001, from $1.75 to $2.25 — but the total rises when state and district dues are added.

"I don't feel like we get anything from national or state to justify that expense," Parkes said.

Parkes said he and many other parents at Carmel Elementary would like to sever ties with the National PTA and form an independent PTO, but were told by the school district that this would not be allowed.

In Fairfax, Va., resentment over dues was a factor when the PTA at Woodson High School voted two years ago to disaffiliate with the national organization and become an independent PTO.

child is no easy task. While it is a wonderful and rewarding experience, it can also be frustrating at times. However, there is no excuse for hurting a child, physically or emotionally, no matter what the circumstances. In observance of National Child Abuse Prevention Month, our local businesses offer some tips to help parents interact more positively with their children and prevent child abuse.

Take a Breather

If you are angry or upset, take a moment to think before you speak or act. This way, you are less likely to do or say something you might regret.

Show Affection

Treat your child with love, affection, and respect, and praise them often.

Listen Up

Spend plenty of time with your children and encourage open communication at an early age.

Talk About It

Discuss your problems with someone you trust, like a pastor, friend or family member.

Be Aware & Take Action

If you suspect a child is being abused, contact your local police or child welfare agency for guidance.
